Dear Oluwaseun:

It is with sincere congratulations that we recognize your completion of UGA's GradTeach Certificate. Through this program, you have explored foundations in the science and evidence-based best practices for teaching and learning in higher education, developing teaching materials along the way, with feedback and guidance from our team of teaching experts.

You began by exploring the science of how learning works, the importance of attending to students' metacognitive skills and motivation to learn, and the role of who are students are in our teaching and teaching choices. In Level 2 you identified specific ways in which you might incorporate active learning into your course and cultivate an environment conducive to learning. In this section of the program you also developed specific course policies for your context. In the final program modules, you brought your lessons-learned together as you developed a set of well-formed learning outcomes, a careful lesson plan, and a robust assignment prompt in a form intended to support student learning.

Finally, you rounded your efforts out with a teaching reflection experience. Through this activity you practiced your own teaching skills in real time and engaged in valuable reflection on (and iterative development of) your approach to teaching.

We commend you on your commitment to your own professional development, and your investment in your future students. It has been a privilege to share in this part of your journey with you.

Sincerely, and on behalf of the Center for Teaching & Learning,

Ruth Poproski, Ph.D.
