

Dear Sigma Xi Inductee,

On behalf of the Society's President, Board of Directors and staff, it is our pleasure to welcome you as a new member of Sigma Xi, The Scientific Research Honor Society. With your induction into the Society, you have joined a cadre of distinguished and committed researchers around the world. Throughout our history, scientists and engineers from a wide range of disciplines—including over 200 Nobel Laureates—have united under our auspices as companions in zealous research. Thus, Sigma Xi membership connects you to both a global scientific network and a venerable scientific legacy.

Enclosed is your Sigma Xi membership certificate. Our members proudly display their framed Sigma Xi certificates as a symbol of honor and recognition. But we are much more than an organization designed to honor those who have made noteworthy contributions in to the research enterprise. All new members are asked to make the following pledge:

"Do you hereby pledge yourself, in accordance with the purposes and objectives of Sigma Xi, The Scientific Research Honor Society, to encourage original investigations in science, to foster companionship and cooperation among scientists, to maintain honor, integrity and honesty in all scientific activities, and to assume the other continuing responsibilities of membership?"

That pledge means more today than ever before. The research community and society as a whole are being profoundly impacted by critical issues. We are helping to preserve and protect true science education in the classroom. In addition, we are leading the grassroots movement to bring researchers and the general public together in meaningful dialogue—not only to enhance society's understanding of science but also to enlighten science's sense of social responsibility.

As you step out now from your initiation into the fullness of membership, we will keep you informed of the Society's many resources, activities and opportunities for involvement. This news will come to you via Sigma Xi Today (featured in the American Scientist magazine), via regular member e-newsletters and via the online platform, Sigma Xi Communities. In addition, you can always find a wealth of information at our web site www.sigmaxi.org. That said, please feel free to contact us at any time if you have any questions about your membership by sending an email to: membership@sigmaxi.org.

We are proud that your outstanding achievements have earned you a place within our international community of scientists and engineers. Once again, welcome to Sigma Xi, The Scientific Research Honor Society! May you enjoy a rich and rewarding relationship with us for many years!
